

This talk will look at the distinction between categorical and dimensional approaches in child and adolescent psychiatry. The talk will cover the theoretical aspects of this including work from behavioural genetics with particular reference to psychosis, autistic spectrum disorder and ADHD. The lecture will highlight the pros and cons of both approaches and briefly mention the reference to some of the arguments brought forward in the new DSMV.